

To Whom It May Concern:

I am opposed to changing any regulations, laws, etc. regarding net neutrality. While I am not an expert on the internet nor computers, I have long appreciated the more democratic way that things are run. I find the name of the proceeding to be very misleading / propagandistic. Who is that "freedom" for?

In the end, this all comes down to money and financial gain. Everything does. And it is not the average consumer who is going to be the big beneficiary. No, it will be, e.g., internet service providers and their ilk who reap the rewards. They are the ones clamoring for "freedom."

Our society is so deeply stratified as it is; it would be nice to have a couple of areas in which that is not the case.

Please, FCC, do not alter anything. Abstain from becoming complicit in the subversion of freedom and fairness.

Sincerely,
Barbara A. Heck
